Section Night 1 October 2007: James Wright Rocks!

This month James will talk about the more obscure rockclimbing areas to be enjoyed throughout New Zealand, and will reflect on his formative influences as a rock climber. Come along and share in James's naval gazing and be inspired at the same time as summer approaches....

Section Trip News

Please send all your fantastic trip reports to newsletter@nzalpine.wellington.net.nz, so everyone can enjoy your stories.

Caro and Matt are still climbing!

The last expedition had been at Easter this year (see earlier report in VertiGO from Matthew) so it was well past time for another mountain trip!

The build up was similar - Maria painted the downstairs flat, Caroline washed the deck, Matthew and Jeremy spent quality time bonding with Zach and Zeke and Alan and Neesha feasted to ensure they had enough stamina for the trip. An alpine start of 3pm was set and within the hour the high point of the Upper Karori Reservoir was reached. Everyone knows that the climb is only half over at that point and the downward leg proved as perilous as ever as Hihi feeding stations were narrowly conquered and marauding Kaka avoided. The group split up near the end of the trip as some had more pressing dinner times to attend to but all made it safe and sound back to the carpark,

Trip participants: Caroline Duggan, Jeremy Bray, Matthew Stevens, Maria Cassidy, Al Lowrie, Neesha, Zeke and Zack!

Scottie freezes his piglets...

Nuns Veil, Mount Cook National Park, climbed 24th-25th August 2007-08-28

After my arm being twisted...

Tossing up on the option of the Stewart Island Singles Ball, the boys convinced me ‘the odds are good but the goods are odd’. I agreed and was on a trip with 4 guys and wasn’t complaining!!! 2 from Wgtn section, 2 from Canterbury and me-a new member of Otago NZAC. We met up late Thursday night in Unwin Hut. Had a leisurely start the next day, crossing a partially frozen but a forceful Tasman River – all five of us linked up. I pointed to Gorilla Stream, assured the guys it was the right one- but was a little anxious as it looked very different to high flow stream in summer. I had been up Nuns Veil in the summer and had got within 200m of the summit before hitting a gnarly bergshund and turning around. This time in late winter, the river was lower and quicker to move up- it was possible to even keep dry feet. There is a small track on the true right, which avoids the large boulders. The stream runs dry early. All the south eastern slopes had avalanched. 2-3m high debris, and we were aware of some rock fall on the west.

We got to the bivvy rock about in about 3.5 hours and continued up towards the saddle to camp for the night.

Paul dragged us all up the glacier, plugging through calve- knee high great powder ski slopes- ... where were my skis!!! We found a camp site on the saddle and dug a trough and pitched our tents.

The temperature dropped quickly and a cold biting wind began, our boots and socks were frozen together and we couldn’t get our feet out, without leaving our socks in our boots. Snow drift was coming into our tent and it was proving difficult to cook anything. At least we were cosy 3 of us in a 2 man tent and a humorous night.

In the morning, snow drift right surrounding the tent, we used knives to pry our boots open and remove the frozen socks. After 1 hour of little success we tried to heat them in our sleeping bags and use a bottle filled with hot water! Wallah!!! our boots could be fitted!!

We moved along the ridge then had an exposed traverse under rock crop and steep slope to the summit. A good biting cold wind but blue sky. The bergshund and crevasses were covered in snow over winter. Timtams were shared on top, Paul belayed me down a pitch to the traverse.

Scott had came down early before the summit with cold feet. Paul and I arrived back at the tent with the others had packed up, and we learned that Scott’s toes were not looking good due to FROSTNIP- and they quickly headed down the mountain. Luckily Scott’s feet began to de thaw, but was a painful experience

We ascended down quickly, and crossed the Tasman River in the dark and back to Unwin Hut, and walking into a 21st party looking a bit bedraggled.

For whom the bell tolled...

Merewyn Ellis and Joshua Groom went to check out the North Island ice climbing opportunities starting with the ultra classic Chiming Bells on Whakapapa Ski Field. Merewyn writes: “Most of our climbing gear is still on route from Canada, so many thanks to Caroline Duggan and Paul Grimwood for lending boots, crampons and ice screws. The route was in good form though protection proved difficult, mostly because Caro only lent us 3 ice screws and one of those was a bit battered and can only be placed using both hands! Anyhow, we got up safely and took a long traverse down the Grand Pinnacle to Broken Leg Gully. Being very badly unfit we decided to dig our snow cave then, and after a soggy but happy night we bailed out to Tokaanu for some hot water therapy to sooth Merewyn's very sore muscles.

Sadly we left the camera in the car, but if you are one of the three cheery Palmerston North guys who climbed after us, we would love to see your photos."

Grands Cojones in the Bugaboos

From Dave Henwood (former Wgtn section member)

"I was very fortunate that we picked a week of gloriously fine weather to visit the Bugaboos. Had a good time although the end of the week was a bit frustrating. I was in a group of 13 from the Vancouver section of the Alpine Club. We started off with a hiss and a roar climbing the classic west ridge of Pigeon Spire and Kain Route on Bugaboo Spire – both technically easy but tons of exposure. Pigeon has a 5.4 crux (did it all in leather mountain boots) and the Kain route has a crux of 5.7 (swapped to rock shoes for that one). You have to admire Conrad Kain for his vision and ability and wonder how he didn't trip over those massive cojones he must have had. The crux pitch is a gendarme that involves climbing good cracks, then edging across a short slab with miles of air underneath, then reaching round a short rib to a nice crack. Technically easy as long as you don't look down.

Unfortunately, the trip was marred by a couple of accidents - while climbing on another route, one of our guys pulled a table sized boulder onto himself which crushed his left hand, then fell onto his left foot before nearly wiping out his belayer half a rope length below. He was able to set up an anchor and bring up his uninjured belayer who stabilised things, then was able to alert some other climbers including a guide who had a radio. The pair were choppered off the face and the injured guy was operated on in Banff hospital about 3 hours after the accident took place.

On the second to last day a woman in the party slipped coming down the gravelly track just above the hut and thought she had badly twisted her ankle. She was flown out next morning."

He's turning into an Aussie.....

Mike O'Brien writes:

"Hi Rach. Have got a job in Halls Creek for a while, so thought I'd tell you about the climbing up in Northern Australia, or "the Top End"...

The Top End

The Top End of Australia is that really hot and sticky bit that not many people choose to inhabit. Temperatures range from 30 – 50 degrees, humidity is high most of the year, and the wild life thrives – the Top End scrub has the highest concentration of venomous snakes, scorpions and spiders in Australia. Bull sharks (similar to Great Whites) inhabit the coastal river systems, but generally you don't have to worry about them, because the crocodiles get them! Sound unpleasant? It can be, but it is also beautiful, unique, and has quite a lot of climbable rock. In winter (the Dry season) it doesn't rain (ever), making for great climbing and exploring weather. The land is truly ancient, and going for a walk in the bush will reveal rock art, amazing tropical water holes, and a landscape quite unlike any in NZ.

Location: The Kimberly (northern Western Australia) and Northern Territory have hundreds of gorges, gully's and ranges made of obscenely good quality rock. It is totally unfair that all this great rock is so far from anywhere. Fly into Darwin or Broome and rent a 4WD.

Climbing: Natural pro. Very few bolted routes, and most bolted routes require some natural gear. While there are quite a lot of established areas and routes, the appeal of this area lies in the new routes to be had!

Grades: Take your pick. Not many routes over grade 23-24 have been established.

Season: The Wet season really is – it puts the West Coast downpours to shame! During the Wet (Summer) its humid, hot, and there are regular torrential down pours. Conversely, in the Dry it always is. It will absolutely, definitely, never rain in the Dry season. Early in the dry the roads can still be impassable, but there is more water to swim in.

Accommodation: A mozzie net will be your best friend. The climbing is remote, so you will need to be self-sufficient.

Services: There is not much of anything (not true – lots of flies, biting ants, etc) up here, so stock up before leaving the town you flew into. Once you leave town supplies from stores get scant and expensive.

Guidebook: Get 'Top End Rock' by Stuart Anderson off the Internet at www.chockstone.org.au/guide. It's recent and useful. 'Northern Rock' by Shane Richardson is out of date and very vague, but is a useful guide to climbable locations.

Restday Activities: Find a water hole/spring/river to sit in – preferably not one inhabited by salt-water crocodiles. The cultural history up here is astounding and well worth attention. And the bush is totally unique, making a tramp in the bush a very rewarding experience (get in touch for pointers).

And Remember: it might take a few days to acclimatise!"

Did I mention the wind? (those Palmie members don't really know what it is)

Whangaehu Hut, 1-2 September 2007
Report by Chris Tuffley (Palmie North)

A message from Rachael and Mike---already up at Tukino, with Rachael being the only skier on the whole Tukino skifield - (an experience highly recommended, specially when the liftie has to sit and watch you ski all day – Ed) -confirmed the forecast of high winds before Terry, Malcolm, Murray and I (from the Palmie section) had even reached Waiouru. "It's windy as blankity," reported Terry. "Oh well, we're going anyway." 3pm in Waiouru felt a little early for dinner, but we weren't sure what time we'd make it to the hut, and an early dinner cooked for us sounded better than preparing a late one after a hard walk. Ditto changing in Waiouru, rather than up at the ski field...so on went thermals, jackets, boots and gaiters before we all piled back into the car. The Tukino road was clear of snow, and in short order we were experiencing the wind ourselves, being buffeted back and forth as we set off to Whangaehu. For all that the walk went fairly quickly, and we joined Rachael and Mike at the hut just as darkness fell.

The wind was roaring round the hut, so we didn't bother making plans or setting alarms for the morning. After a restless night---I think we all slept poorly---I woke to a square of red sunshine on the wall, and sat up to admire the sunrise. As the sun rose the wind lessened, and, breakfasted, we decided we ought to go out for a walk. The four of us from Palmerston North headed out ahead of Rachael and Mike, and wandered up the Whangaehu glacier. The East Gully of Matihao looked inviting, but we soon found it was too windy even for that and quickly retreated. Sidling round below Matihao we found a relatively sheltered spot for a bit of lunch, then headed on up to the Summit Plateau. Snaking ghosts of spindrift added another dimension of beauty to the great white amphitheatre-like expanse, but it was a scene best admired with your back to the wind, to spare your cheeks the frequent blasts of flying ice.

We continued on to give me my first view of Crater Lake, then chose Dome and Dome Shelter as the highest point of our meander---the wind having forced us to retreat from Pyramid. The view from the top of Dome was fantastic: aside from the gusting wind it was a beautifully sunny, and the white cone of Ngauruhoe was visible beyond the northern peaks of Ruapehu. Dropping back down off Dome we met Rachael and Mike briefly at the top of the Whangaehu glacier, then continued on down to the hut, at last walking with our backs to the wind.

After dinner the roar of the wind outside somehow managed to crank itself up a notch, and the hut shook with the gusts. With the hut perched on top of a bluff, and a trip to the loo requiring crampons as it was, we decided that perhaps we'd better all try to hold on for the night...We passed some time reading the hut's old Reader's Digests, until it was finally late enough that we could respectably turn in, then settled down for another restless night. Mercifully, the wind lessened with sunrise again, relieving our fears we wouldn't be able to walk out. It was still too windy for climbing though, so we decided to just head home. Venturing out, Terry got the outer door open after clearing the spindrift in the bootroom...only to discover a half inch thick sheet of ice still blocking the way, that had to be cleared with an iceaxe! We packed up, paid a quick visit to some students who'd built themselves a spacious snowcave at the base of the bluffs, then followed the poles back out to Tukino and the road home.

We were Mike Courtney, Terry Crippen, Murray Gifford, Malcolm Leary, Rachael Schmidt, and Chris Tuffley

And the last word goes to Nank

AT Queens Birthday weekend John Cocks, Paul Denys, Graeme Morrison and token northerner, John Nankervis, walked up 2 Mile Creek from Lake Wakatipu and crossed Skingut Pass in deep snow to one of the bivvy rocks in South Wye Creek. Next day, despite perfect weather and skilled navigators they stared across the abyss at Point 2307M from "False Point 2307M" (Geographic Board approval pending) and retreated. Out down the South Wye under the sunny crags next day.

A note from Don French

DOC has put in a poled route between Kime and Mangahuka, and will do the same between Powell and Jumbo, and along the Southern Crossing.

RECALL ON PETZL SARKEN CRAMPONS

The problem

The front points of the crampons are susceptible to premature wearout following heavy use. There is a risk of cracking of the metal forefoot near the front point(s), followed by possible breakage if usage continues.

Details

Petzl SARKEN crampons. Any binding system, black or orange colour metallic parts.

What to do

Stop using the crampons. Do not return the crampons to retailers.

Ring Spelean NZ on 03 434 9535 from 9am to 5pm weekdays and provide your name and shipping address for delivery of a replacement.

PAST CMC MEMBERS

The Canterbury Mountaineering Club is attempting to rebuild its membership database and wants to include anyone who was ever a member and establish when those people joined, or resigned. If anyone knows of past members, or has older CMC member lists/records please contact Greg Ewing, CMC Secretary greg.ewing@ist.co.nz

Alternatively, you can write to him at the CMC, PO Box 2415, Christchurch Mail Centre 8140, or drop information to Margaret at the NZAC National Office and she will pass it on.

DISCOUNTED NZAC PUBLICATIONS

Up until the National Office closes for Christmas (21 December 07) we will be running a special deal on the Wellington Rock and Taranaki guidebooks. You can buy the pair for $25, or get them separately for only $15 each, plus p&p. Email: Margaret\(at\)alpineclub.org.nzalpineclub.org.nz) if you are interested.

And more from Margaret:

CHANGE IN SECTION'S FINANCIAL YEAR END

The Wellington Section Committee have recently resolved to change the section's financial year end from 28 February to 30 June to align with recent changes in the NZAC National financial year. If you have any queries with regards to this change please contact Garth London, Phone: (04) 479-2984 (hm) or Email: chairperson@nzalpine.wellington.net.nz

LOST PROPERTY

Left at Ruapehu on weekend of 1-2 Sept 07, one toiletry bag with contents, including a pair of glasses.

If anyone has picked this up, please email Dave Pearton at dpearson@gmail.com

Lose the Weight, Not the Performance

Ski Trab, a small, 60yr old, family owned ski company from Bormio, Italy, world renowned for producing light weight, high performance and high quality skis is finally available in NZ.

Ski mountaineering racers, mountain guides, ski patrollers and back country enthusiasts throughout Europe and North America have for years "lost the weight, but not the performance" and now New Zealand skiers can too.

This are the lightest skis on the NZ market and at the 2007 winter special intro price the cheapest to.

New Zealand Alpine Club members receive a further discount on the 2007 winter special intro price
