Arapiles Reconnoitered

I tagged this on as a weekend explore following a standard Melbourne work trip in August. Despite the showery weather this place I rate as awesome!! The rock was 'bomber' 500 million year old metamorphosed sandstone – 2km of rock faces, over 4000 routes. And it's located just 3-4 hours drive from Melbourne.

We climbed 4 routes in our short time there – Muldoon (13), Watchtower Chimney (13), Falcon (18) and Eagle Cleft (12). Routes are generally long (100m+) and require an adventurous spirit! For a near trad gear novice such as myself, placements were straightforward, I completed 10 pitches with around 70 placements – even with rope pull not one dislodged. A set of say 20-25 nuts and 3-5 cams is advisable, however you don't need to go OTT to have a lot of fun here. The campground is well laid out with good shade under pine trees – and cheap too at $2/night. There are no shower facilities so booking in either in a cabin at Nantimut or at the campground in Horsham every 3-4 days is advisable!

Well, we've done the explore so now we just need YOU!! This is our first overseas club trip we've had in 5 years, it'd be great if you could join us at the end of this month.

A weekend ski touring, in the south!

The big high that we are always looking for was centred over the South Island, Mount Ruapehu looked as though it was going to be breezy up the tops, and hey a weekend ski touring down in the Nelson Lakes... why not!

A plan was hatched on Thursday night – ferry tickets booked Friday morning, the team (John Nankervis, Rob McBrearty, and myself) were on the ferry Friday evening. After a night at the shelter under a certain sign that's best not to divulge, we got up and headed up to Rainbow ski field, donned our gears and skinned off back country to find a fresh basin all to ourselves (climbers aren't selfish at all!). We skinned up one of the smaller peaks and then skied (well the other two guns carved up the fresh powder they were in awe over!) down to the bush line. Lunch was eaten in quite a pretty spot beside the river before the journey back to the car, and out to a to St Arnaud for the night. What a place to be with clear blue skies and hardly a breath of wind, and the squelch of powder under the skis.

Upon waking the next morning and a classic climbers nervous peek out the window, it was neat to see another perfect day just like the last. The goal, to head up Mt Roberts for the day ski touring. We drove to the car park, geared up and with skis on our packs headed up the walking track for an hour to gain the ridge and the snow. Skins were put on and we continued up the ridge, up to basin one, where we overlooked the old Mt Roberts ski field. We followed along the ridge up to tabletop where lunch was eaten looking over St Arnaud and the basin we had skied the day before. We then continued on to the highest point on the ridge and packed away the skins. The first run of the day down to the bottom of the basin was tops, great snow, nice turns, amazing weather. We then headed back to the car and was out by 4 pm, ready to head back to Picton for the 6 pm sailing.

It was a really enjoyable and relaxing trip with perfect weather and great company. With it been the same amount of travelling as to get to Whapapa ski field, more South Island ski trips will be enjoyed.

Magnificent seven

A small band of mercenaries drawn from assorted Wellington mountain clubs headed deep into the Sabine valley seeking Spanish gold on Mt Franklin. The first gunslinger dropped out not far from Sabine hut with old war wounds and five continued. They met up with the seventh who had been left behind after the post-AIC expedition and had gone feral. Being alone in them thar' hills left him ill-prepared for human contact and after a dodgy poker-hand he departed down valley to join the new Sabine colony. Another then decided there was insufficient treasure to warrant getting up that early so only four rode forth to Franklin.

From the ancient moraine wall above Blue Lake they climbed away from an ice covered Lake Constance and sidled across into the main basin below Franklin. The loot on the summit must have had an old Navajo curse guarding it however, and not far from the summit ridge, a wet snow avalanche propelled one mercenary back from whence they came. No damage done, but no one messes with them ol' curse-things, so the mercenaries decided to hang together lest they all hang apart and beat a retreat to Blue Lake and an afternoon of sober revelry and some dived for sunken Spanish galleys in the lake.

A South Island traverse

Emma Richardson had no genetic predisposition for the outdoors.. nor was she forced by parents to endure suchlike "family holidays". Rather she independently joined the Christchurch Tramping Club (CTC) while at Hagely High at age 16 - because her mum wouldn't let her join the kayaking club. She soon outgrew early Banks Peninsular and foothill trips for harder adventures. In no time at all she became known to other backcountry legends. I know of one lads' trip where the group had taken great pride getting to a remote Westland Biv only to encounter a lone teenage girl already there... and they had flown in! They soon discovered her ability to scrounge food off anyone... a very useful skill for her most recent endeavour!

I do remember one early trip with Emma. I was leading a South-North traverse across Mt Owen in terrible weather. Here we encountered a party at lake Bulmer and they lent me a GPS to help navigate the snow covered Owen massif in almost zero visibility. It was a challenging trip... our cross-over party did not risk the North-South crossing (a good move in the these conditions for those who don't know Mt Owen).. the morale of my group was pretty low and some began to doubt whether the leader knew where he was going... however, Emma's characteristic determination showed through on this her first snow trip... (It's amazing what you can endure after being at school with the Mains'!)

Well, at the vastly older age of 21, Emma has recently completed a solo traverse of the South Island. Here are some statistics from Emma's tramp:

Distance:	1780 km
Uphill:	93,125 m
Downhill:	93,591 m
Marked huts+bivies (including named rock bivs):	~170
Days:	180 (I think)

I was surprised at these numbers... and double checked the computation... especially the uphill... but if anything, the stats are probably an underestimate! This is the hard way to get the maximum benefit from your annual hut pass!

Any traverse of the Southern Alps is a remarkable and individual achievement. But a solo, continuous traverse at 21, with very little external contact and support (her Mum + Dad met her at Mt Cook and Springs Junction, and I met her at Arthurs) makes this one rather unique. In the months preceding December 2008, Emma packed maps and food parcels... (what else is the final year of your degree for?) and then posted these off to high country stations and DoC offices – no helicopter food drops on this trip!

Many of the sections along Emma's route were over 20 days in length... up to 195km long and involved up to 9000m of climbing... that's a heavy pack haul! Furthermore, many of the hardest parts were off-track.. and she had to cross some very big rivers alone. Her boots failed her in the very first 2 weeks of the journey... but undeterred, she found a pair of discarded men's boots with no tread whatsoever in a Fiordland hut and continued the rest of the journey in these.

Comparing epic tramps is meaningless... so much depends on the fickle weather and the conditions encountered... and Emma had her fair share of foul weather... gales, NW storms and unseasonal early heavy snows. Her tent was almost destroyed by gales on the tops of the Princess mountains, buried in snow beneath the Waiau Pass, partly eaten by rats in Wanaka.... and she encountered 80cm of rain in 24hrs while trying to get to the Mungo Hut. Without a mountain radio there was no forewarning of these events (especially the rats) other than the usual weather precursors immediately before. Sensible river crossing decisions, good basic gear and good decision making are a given for this kind of adventure. However, the motivation to persevere is something else. Her route was compromised by conditions and there is unfinished business in Fiordland... but deviations and side trips to the East (like a 5000m, 95km detour into the Takitimu ranges) made up for most of these compromises in my opinion.

During her trip several friends encountered her in the hills... most observing that traversing the South Island appeared to be an effective weight loss program. Certainly in Arthur's Pass she was in scavenge mode (camped out in the church). She reminded me of stray dogs I had encountered in Patagonia earlier this year - a happy stray dog. Although Emma survived the recession and housing crisis... she did not completely escape the leaky building syndrome... However, rather than pursuing a path of litigation she found that a packliner between the fly and outer was particularly effective.

It was early in the expedition, after a forced retreat from the Princess mountains, that Emma encountered her true Nemesis - a concerned, well-meaning policeman at Tuatapere. He insisted on providing the emergency locator beacon and did his best to dissuade her from tramping alone off-track in Fiordland. No doubt he was used to over-confident tourists. Six months later he contacted Emma's mum to follow-up and complete some report for the year. He wanted to know when she had gotten out of the bush etc... According to Emma's mum there was a startled silence when told she hadn't... apparently it took the poor constable quite a few moments and clarifications to grasp the concept that the slight girl he encountered six months ago was still on the same trip and was now nearing Nelson!

There was no room for battery powered luxuries like cameras and GPS's on her trip... but periodically she posted back a series of journals... and the stack of blotted pages with runny ink that I spied looked like they could tell a story in themselves.

In the absence of these stories, the numbers speak for themselves - especially if you know the joys of South Westland, off-track tramping in Fiordland, transalpine crossings and very heavy packs!

Double or nothing in Nelson Lakes

Richard Davies and Andrew Whiteford decided to pack a bit more fresh air into the post-AIC expedition, so eschewing the fleshpots of St Arnaud at 11.30 on a drizzly Friday night we headed up to Lakehead hut. After too-few hours sleep we were away again heading up the Travers valley. Scenic, aye, but really a bit of a trudge for the 'n'th time up there. Dropped off some stuff at John Tait hut at about 10.30am and carried on up Summit Creek to try Travers.

All was going perfectly to plan until we reached the soft, deep, sticky snow. A long afternoon of wallowing had us about 200m below the summit after our turnaround time. Not fancying a tango with the spaniards of Summit creek after dark we reluctantly turned around and made it back to John Tait well after dark for some food and sleep.

Next morning we climbed quickly up to Cupola hut and made tracks - literally - for Cupola. Had lunch at the base of the real climbing and suffered a bad attack of alpine lassitude as we looked at where Ollies group had swum down the gully through more deep soft snow. We returned to Kleine Scheidegg (aka Cupola hut) and with the camera on maximum zoom watched China and Fraser descending the Hopeless Couloir. Those four deserved a DB, but instead we left them and bailed back to John Tait, a crisp night out under the stars and more trudge in the Travers.

WELLINGTON SECTION NZ ALPINE CLUB AGM 2009 MINUTES

Date: Monday 7 September 2009
Venue: Turnbull House, Wellington
Present: 31 members
In the Chair: James Wright
Commenced: 8.14 pm following normal section night admin

1. Apologies/Proxies

Apologies were received from Lou Thornley, Catherine Moger, Paul Clarke, and Dave Bamford. No proxies were received.

2. Minutes of previous AGM and matters arising

The minutes of the 2008 AGM have been on the section website since the last AGM and copies were made available at the meeting. There were no matters arising.

Gwen Rashbrooke moved that the 2008 AGM minutes be accepted. Seconded by Diana Ranger. Motion carried unanimously.

3. Chairperson's report

Gwen Rashbrooke spoke to the Chairperson's report and highlighted the key points raised:

- Running the section is a team effort, there was no chairperson in 2008-09 so all committee members shared the workload.
- Committee is looking for a volunteer to chair the section.
- The section focussed on its core business - the newsletter, section nights, film festivals, photo competition, and courses.
- The section nights and film festivals were very successful, as was the 2009 photo competition.
- The alpine instruction course and summer rock course both ran well with good subscription from students.
- The section's trips were fantastic, successful, and well organised.
- The section relies on volunteer input, so thanks to all involved.

James Wright noted that the section is running as well as ever, with many people happy to volunteer – a sign of a healthy section. He asked for suggestions as to what the section can do better.

Hinrich Schaefer moved that the Chairperson's report be accepted. Seconded by Nigel Roberts. Motion carried unanimously.

4. Treasurer's report

Richard Davies spoke to the Treasurer's report, drawing attention to the fact that the section's financial position is better than it was 12 months ago. This is due to an excellent Banff film festival result, and profitable instruction courses – thanks to Don and Blair for their financial management of the courses. Richard noted that as with last year, the section received only a qualified audit this year, and would like to put in place steps to avoid this next year. Richard thanked Karen Domanesschi for her work as the previous treasurer, and Paul Clarke who acted as the section's honorary auditor. It was noted that the section needs to find a new auditor.

It was suggested by Diana Ranger that the section could sign and countersign collection box takings on section nights as these have previously been a concern to the auditor. Events are also a concern for the auditor, and treatment of equipment in the books.

Gwen Rashbrooke moved that the Treasurer's report be accepted. Seconded by Diana Ranger. Motion carried unanimously.

Photos of Mount Aspiring

Artist Ruth Watson is making a sculpture of a mountain, and is planning to base this on Mount Aspiring. If anyone can supply Ruth with photos of the mountain from as many different angles as possible this would be very useful. The images don't have to be large files, just clear enough to see features, taken in fairly well lit conditions and with as much of the mountain as possible in the shot (so probably approach photos rather than any particular pitch on a face).

The sculpture will be on view in the Auckland City Gallery later in the year. Contact Ruth Watson at r.watson@auckland.ac.nz

Ruapehua Hut – roofing specialist required

For many years we have been concerned about the state of the roof on Ruapehu Hut. We have taken a number of measures to stop snow/spindrift entering the roof space of this hut, and whilst this has improved things considerably, ultimately the roof needs significant modifications. We feel a thorough professional assessment is required before we proceed any further, and hence we are calling on our North Island members for any contacts you may have in the building or roofing industry to help us.

Are you a roofing specialist? Do you know a roofing specialist who can help us?

It has proven very difficult indeed to find a roofing specialist willing to assess Ruapehu Hut, let alone do any work up there! Any assistance you can lend will be much appreciated.

Shackleton Traverse

My name is Andrew Kula and I am actively climbing in rock and alpine since 1971.

On the 20th of January I am planning to take part in the Shackleton Traverse of South Georgia which is a one-off small guided expedition organized and attached to a commercial adventure trip organized by the Peregrine Adventures. We are looking for one or more people with alpine experience to join the group.

The whole trip will start from Ushuaia in Argentina and take 21 days at sea and on land.

A small ice-strengthened Russian ship will take a group of 80 plus people on a voyage through Falkland Islands and the Weddell Sea towards the Antarctic, then to South Georgia where a small expedition of 6 -10 people will take on the crossing. We are short of a few people at this stage and seeking experienced hikers or climbers to take part in the trip. One should budget around AU$20K to do the whole trip including the airfare, the cruise and the crossing.

If you know anybody interested in the area and willing to inquiry further please let me know, or let them to contact Peregrine Adventures directly by email at expedition@peregrineadventures.com.
